Loss of Ship Susan of Nantucket.

Thursday, April 28.—At daylight took to the oars again, (those who were able,) our progress was very slow, as our limbs were beguimed with cold, and want of room to exercise. At 11 A. M., came near the land but did not meet with a place sufficiently smooth for landing, on account of surf. Steered to the N. E. till near the end of the island, when the wind came strong from the N. with snow which decided the case,—and we must, in doing which we succeeded bet- ter than we had feared, as our boats received no serious injury. It was about 2 P. M. when we landed. About 2 hours after saw a sail about 6 miles distant, set fire to some grass, and raised a signal, but of no avail, as we were probably not seen, the vessel being amongst the ice, and trying to keep from coming in contact, and soon steered to the south and disappeared.

After landing, turned up our boats on the snow and ice, and prepared to sleep, in which I think not many succeeded, as I am sure I did not, although I had not slept since the first ice was seen from the Susan.

Tuesday 26th.—At daylight Mr J. Ham- blin and myself went to look for food, or rather if there was any thing on which we could depend for subsistence. At 12 M., returned, having made no further discovery than that snow and ice covered the face of the ground; that the rocks near the shore on which there was weed growing, and adhering to which were a small shell fish about the size of whortleberries; and on the shore a small quantity of kelp; these we used from day to day.

Third and fourth of May the ship's com- pany built a place to live in, as I wanted their boat to put in order for a no less voy- age than some of the Northern Ports of China, a desperate undertaking truly, but what will not man undertake when driven to despair by hunger? not that our stock of provision taken from the wreck was all ex- pended, but soon would be, notwithstanding our living as much as possible on kelp and shell fish, such as I have before described.

I had thought it barely possible that by pulling and sailing near the shore of the is- land on which we now were, and with the first fair wind and good way to cross to the next, and by keeping near the shore, be able to shelter or go on shore in storms, and so reach Matsmai, where I concluded the na- tives would not drive us away without first giving us a supply of rice. That done, we should not starve; we would then make the attempt to pass Matsmai straits, and cross the Sea of Japan, through Corea Straits, hoping, however, before that time to fall in with some friendly vessel, and so terminate our forlorn hope, but he who permitted us to reach Companies Island had not forgotten us.

Thursday, May 5th, one week after land- ing, we launched our little boat for the voy- age before described, although to all ap- pearances desperate. Yet we had strong hearts and hoped for the best. Our number being seven in all, after steering S. West about one hour and a half, saw a smoke raised by those left behind, a signal for a sail, which we soon discovered to the S. E. We soon gave chase, but as the sail drew ahead, we were willing to allow that the old adage held good, that a stern chase is a hard one. At times the breeze would die, and we gain, then increase, and we lose, or at least not gain much; we were now near enough to see a man at the mast head, yet we were not seen, then came a fresh breeze and I had the sorrow to see that those on board meant to improve it, as the sails were at once trimmed, and out went the main top- mast steering sail. We were near enough to see many of the larger ropes, but were not seen; saw a man go to relieve the mast head, and soon after, with inexpressible pleasure, saw the steering sail come in, the head yards braced up, and the ship came to the wind with the main topmast to the mast. We now knew for a certainty that we had been dis- covered, and that she waited our arrival, which was slow, as the men at the oars had over exerted themselves during the chase, and now were quite exhausted. The vessel proved to be the Black Warrior of New Lon- don, Henry W. Bartlett, master, who re- ceived us on board, sent to the island and fetched those who were on shore, supplied us with clothing, and treated us with the ut- most kindness and his officers also.

May 8th.—Spoke bark Endeavor of N.B., Capt. Howland, who kindly took 8 of the crew, and supplied myself with some articles of clothing of which I stood in need.

May 9th.—Spoke ship Huntsville of Cold Spring, Capt. Smith, who took 8 more of the crew, 1st and 2d officers included, and gave us a further supply of clothing.

And now, in conclusion, I will say that the loss of my ship I attribute to the inaccuracy of the general chart, as when I first saw the land 25 miles distant, it, according to the chart, should have been 80 or 90, in which case I could have worked to the leeward be- fore the gale, ice, and sea. The next morn- ing, when the wind came to the westward, worked off shore again, as I had been but 25 days from Ascension Island, and had on board 2 excellent 8 day chronometers. I had every confidence in the correctness of my longitude, and supposed the land correctly laid down. I have since seen a chart on board bark Endeavor, on which the land was laid down as I found it.

And now perhaps a few remarks on Eu- rope or Companies Island, might not be amiss, as others may be deceived by their charts as I have been.

It is laid down some 60 miles to the west- ward of the truth, on Norrie's chart, or at least on the one which I had; the land is high, and covered with snow at the time of my leaving, May 6th, and I should think the mountains and higher parts are through the year.

The beach is narrow and generally stony or rocky, there is a bank some 250 feet high the side of which was covered with snow and ice many feet thick. From the top of the bank for a quarter of a mile back, there was but little snow, the ground covered with a coarse grass some four feet high, then comes a growth of stunted birch trees, seldom more than fifteen feet high, the ground covered with snow, as soon as you come to the wood, some two or three feet deep; a few ground pines, except the birch, was all the wood seen by us; from the wood, the land rises gradually at first, and afterwards, or as you approach the mountains, covered with snow, is seen.

As our fare was very poor, we had not strength to take very long walks, so far as we did go, however, we met with no animals except a few foxes; the land birds seen were eagles, ravens and a few small birds resembling the lark. Water fowls were quite plentiful, but rather shy. Saw a few seals near the shore, but none came to land. Whether there are fish near the shore I did not
